

This Force Options Simulator offers real-life simulation training and enhances the judgment and decision-making skills of peace officers in emergency situations.

The Commission on Peace Officer Standards and Training (POST) is charged with the duty of encouraging and developing necessary and effective training methods for California law enforcement. POST has recently ensured the availability of simulator training by establishing and funding 18 Regional Skills Training Centers. Each site will have Driving and Force Options Simulators, equipment for Defensive Tactics Training, and a Skid Car to teach Advanced Car Control techniques. A total of 22 Regional Skills Centers have been recommended to furnish training for more than 57,000 peace officers throughout California.

Force Options and Driving Simulator training are important parts of a comprehensive law enforcement training program. Driving simulators provide students practice in sharpening their judgment and decision-making skills for routine patrol and emergency response situations. The Force Options Simulator provides the officer with practice in handling volatile situations, and the use of proper force options which are available.

The goal of this type of training is to reduce deaths, injuries, liability costs, and to improve overall safety for California law enforcement personnel and the public. For information on simulator training, please call (916) 227-4895.

All simulators include a radio simulator that allows students to communicate with their instructor.
